Allow a public user to register a customer account	3
When a customer account is created, an email verifying the registration is sent to the account owner. The account is immediately usable.	2
There must be a default admin account that comes with the application. The credentials to the admin account are hard-coded.	1
After registering, a user can login (i.e. start a session) using only the credentials they provided in the registration process	2
A public user, customer, or admin must be able to access the listing of goods. The listing can include description, photos, etc.	3
A public user, customer, or admin must be able to find goods through search queries.	5
The user should be able to view a more detailed page on a good they are interested in.	3
When picking goods to purchase, the customer adds goods to their cart. In this process, they also indicate quantity and other possible details (color, customer requests, etc.). Multiple goods can be added to the cart.	3
The customer checks out their cart. This should show all the items in the cart. The customer can remove goods and modify the quantity and other details (if any) of each good. When ready, the customer will proceed to payment methods.	3

Payment methods will allow the customer to pick over multiple modes (credit, COD, etc.). Depending on the method selected, other required input will be prompted. For example, when credit is selected, the user will be asked for the credit card number, name of holder, month of expiration, CVC, etc.	5
After the payment method is finalized, the user will be prompted for the delivery address.	2
When all above three steps are completed, the customer is shown a summary of their purchase, payment, and delivery address. They must have an option to go back and edit some details. The purchase is then confirmed.	2
After confirmation, an email is sent to the customer containing an invoice in PDF format. The contents of the invoice is similar to the summary in 3.IV. The cart is then cleared.	5
The contents of a customer's cart must remain intact over their sessions. That is, when they logout and login again in the middle of making a purchase, the cart must be retained	2
